By WILL IRWIN.

London, March 13 .- "What are we going to do for gentlemen when this war is over?" wailed an English aristocrat the other day. He was using the word "gentleman" in the English sense, not in our sense, of DENIES IT WAS

In those words, however, he called attention to a curious social phenomenon of the great war as it affects England. Whether this be a oneyear war or a three-year war, the upper class is bound to find itself at Watched Companions Make the finish depleted as the British upper class was never depleted before. We read in history of the titles finished forever in the Wars of the Roses, which did such fearful things to the Norman strain in England. But, according to shrewd observers in the upper class, the Norman population of England has been harder hit in the first six months of this war Amedeo Pulignano, the detective, whose than in all the Wars of the Roses.

An American merchant whose business puts him in contact with shelishing the Department of Weights every class of Englishman was speaking of this matter only yesterday. "I know fifteen English families of the upper class," he said, "which Only three Republicans voted against have lost an eldest son. Seven of them were only sons, and five of these sons were heirs to titles."

> For this, in so far as the English are concerned, has been an upper class war. It is this class which has taken it most seriously, which has sent the greatest proportion of young men to the front. To be ablebodied and of military age and not to serve in the army in some capacity has become, with the upper class, a disgrace.

Pulignano testified that he was born in Italy twenty-five years ago and has been a member of the police force since December 1, 1913. He was assigned last fall to investigate anarchistic activities in the city, he said, and visited the Breschi group, at 301 East 106th Street, on November 27. Among the regular attendants at their meetings was Carlo Tresca, whom the witness identified in the courtroom.

It was not until December 7, the itness said, that he met Carbone. By that time he had won the confidence of the anarchists. Carbone's criticism of the group, according to Pulignano, was that they "talk too much and don't do anything." His new friend, the detective said, inflamed by anarchistic speeches, manifested a desire to set off bombs. On January 1 he introduced Pulignano to Abarno, another bomb en

Boat Missing from the Aguila Reaches Safety with . Fifteen. London, March 31 .- The official an-missing passengers of the steamer Falaba, which was sunk by a German submarine, is Leon Chester Thrasher, an American engineer, who had been living for the last twelve months on the Gold Coast, British West Africa. Reference to the form which has to be filled up to satisfy the Board of Trade by every passenger embarking at a British port before tickets are issued shows that Mr. Thrasher was thirty-one years old at his last birth day. He was unmarried. Thrasher had an American passport, and in the form he was required to fill out before embarking, described himself as an American citizen, but employed by the Broomassie Mines, Limited. Inquiry at the offices of the company in London elicited the information that nothing had been heard from Thrasher and that it was presumed he had been drowned.

Inquiry from people connected with the London offices of the brocmassie Mines, by whom Mr. Thrasher was employed, elicited the information that up to last night nothing had been heard of the missing man.

"We fear that he has been drowned," said a high official of the company, "Another employe of the company, a Mr. Seccombe, who was in the Falaba, has told us he fears that Mr. Thrasher was drowned."

say that when the submarine ap-proached the steamer the German cap-tain shouted in English through a megaphone, "I am going to sink you." Another first class passenger from the Falaba turned up in Liverpool last night, having been rescued by a trawler and landed at Milford.

The real nature of the submarine attack on the Falaba is brought home by a number of remarkable photos taken from the deek of the torpedeed at the contract of the submarine of the vessel by an Englishman. One picture shows a boat which capsized when the torpedo struck the Falaba, the passengers in the water struggling to cured a precarious grip on the keel.
